

Yair Grinberger – Bio

Yair Grinberger is a senior lecturer in geoinformatics at the Department of Geography, Hebrew University of Jerusalem. His research interests lie at the intersection of social sciences and Geographic Information Science, where he leverages geospatial data to better identify, explore, and understand social and cultural processes, as well as to support societal goals. Yair is engaged in research across various domains, including mobility studies, urban simulation, volunteered geographic information, and geo-cultural studies. In collaboration with Prof. Itay Fischhendler, he utilizes high-resolution data on photovoltaic panel installations to investigate how geographical, social, and political contexts influence the likelihood of adopting renewable energy.
